Questions to Dig Deeper:

1. In today's culture (social media, podcasts, books, church culture), what are some subtle red flags that a Christian leader or influencer might be hiding behind sheep's clothing or a personal brand rather than authentic Christ-likeness?

2. Why do you think it is so easy for Christians to mistake charisma, gifts, or platform size as the measure for spiritual health? What helps you stay focused on character over performance when evaluating spiritual leaders?

3. Think about a time when you were under intense stress, criticism, or conflict, when your tree got shaken. What fell out? What does that situation reveal about where the Spirit is currently working on and in you?

4. What is the difference between simply knowing about God and being known by Him? How do we prevent our own faith from sliding into a routine performance or an external label?

5. What is one quiet, tangible way you can let the fruit of Christ's love leak out into your family, workplace, or neighborhood this week without needing recognition or a platform for it?
